

The end of the world – it happened before

In this chapter, we talk about other doomsdays in the past and about prophecies that tell that we are in the middle of the next one. The world as we know it is ending. In my view these prophecies are to take as serious as our guts in today's world situation. At the end of the chapter, I will introduce a particularly interesting prophecy, the Bluestar Prophecy. It comes from the old oral tradition of the Hopi Indians and is highly topical, especially because it is the only pending Prophecy of the Hopi, all others have already been met.

Therefore, the Hopi assume that we are already in the middle of the ending of the world. They expect a blue and a red star, of course. We could of course also talk here about the predictions of centuries ago living Nostradamus and at least, as for the pole shift, we will do so. Or those of Alois Irrlmaier, who lived in Germany in the middle of the twentieth century. Or we follow the predictions of Martin Zoller who lives today. But I leave that to my readers, because they can find out a lot on the internet themselves. A more interesting question is: How do you have to understand such predictions? What if they were just the much more accurate versions of our belly-grunts, a grumble you've probably already felt? There's something in the air, right? You may associate it with concrete political and social developments, such as the wave of migration, terrorism, intelligence services, the Federal Chancellor, weather changes or animal cruelty. Or with your account balance. But what if this grumbling refers to the state of the whole world? It is amazing how medial people (prophets) saw all the developments that I described in the first chapter. And makes us curious about what they still saw, and how it went on in their inner vision. But at least as eager we should want to know everything about the previous worlds and their endings, right? It is not that our history started with the Flood. For example, the ancient Egyptians and Greeks spoke of a far more advanced civilization that lay beyond the pillars of Hercules (Gibraltar) and went down with this flood: Atlantis. The Hopi are said to have already survived three endings and beginnings and rescued their knowledge. Their tradition is unique and will be the focus of this chapter for the purpose to learn how we can not only survive but can happily dance through the end of the world! How is it for a prophet to have these visions of the future? Imagine, while you are feeling this belly grumbling in your body, you see at the same time, like in a daydream, whole events and scenes pass by your inner eye. So clearly, as if you remember yesterday. This is how a prophet could experience it. Or his information comes symbolically and in dreams. And often the experience will be accompanied by overwhelming, intense emotions. Maybe this has even happened to you, because each one of us has this ability to reach into the future just as he has ears to hear.

Our concept of time is outdated. From another dimension it's like a stream of data, a timeline. An event like 9-11 has a big impact on the timeline, not only into the future but also back and into our collective consciousness. It seems that events send waves in both directions - like a stone falling into the water. Even if we ourselves experience time linearly, from a higher dimension we would be able to track shockwaves backwards or forwards like the points on a straight line. If we tune in intuitively, we can already sense the event through the wave that is approaching us from the future. Imagine a ball string in a swimming pool. You know this separation for the lapping swim: If one of the balls is briefly submerged in the water, this event sends a restlessness in the form of waves to both sides, while all balls are dancing alternately a while up and down. Until they have calmed down again. In a consciousness that is traveling in the 'imaginary number space', so to speak, time must behave the same way. According to this theory a paranormal medial perception is not amazing, but simply what you would expect. Most younger mathematicians and physicists have no problem imagining this.

For example, I myself felt the collective drama of 9/11 (World Trade Center) a few hours earlier with the most severe stomach ache and a scary feeling that something bad had happened. At the 50 time of the impact itself, I was calm again and my day went on normal. At that time in my life I lived without media and learned only in the evening by the call of my daughter, what had happened.
It was only then and with the TV pictures that the huge emotional-mental shockwave hit me like everyone around the whole world (everyone informed by media). My belly grunts coincided with the time when the final decisions had to be made and the perpetrators were up for boarding. What if 55 a solar or galactic disaster is already sending a wave ahead - years in advance? All we must remember that the light of the sun takes eight minutes to reach Earth, and that the light from the next fixed star will travel to us for a full year. So maybe the dice already has been dropped long ago out there! Each of us has a sixth sense, a seventh and many more. If you do not know yours, it's because you have not activated or trained these senses yet. Maybe you have been talked out of these 60 abilities and you do not believe that they even exist. Please think about: Just because all your neighbors are blind, you do not have to live without seeing! If we want to continue according to our motto 'happy through the end of the world' (the original book title in German), in ease and in joy, we need all the senses, even those who are not yet trained. We must learn to smell again to be in the right place at the right time. Because that will be where we aim to in our training, if we want to 65 survive: to be in the right place at the right time.

And you can learn that! On the other hand, if you do not take medial perceptions seriously, I understand that completely. As a science-oriented and long-time trained teacher of mathematics and economics I found these things even more strange thirty years ago. Until I realized how big the white spots are on my own, inner map. In my intellectual arrogance I had declared them simply 70 nonexistent and put those things out of reach as far as possible! Finally, in the years since then, I could not ignore the input of my other half of the brain, because in my life more and more amazing things happened that could only be described as paranormal, inexplicable and defying logic. And not only since my little felted animals began to talk to me. After all, I could no longer uphold the belief in the nonexistence of anything I could not see or hear, what was not measurable or 75 countable, or was already chewed on by scientific experts. I am not a monkey (you certainly know this picture of the three monkeys, who keep their eyes, ears or mouth shut and below it is said: I see nothing, I hear nothing, I say nothing). Incidentally, that led me back to my search for God, which I had given up in late puberty.

Today, after many spiritual heights on which I fooled myself (see my first book "Hurray, the 80 Lichtfilzlinge come" only in German language available), I landed again on earth, grounded myself deeply and now see myself more as a post-spiritual atheist with a sense of complete attachment to this entire creation. I love this planet and I love humanity. And in my view of today I consider the cause of all creation as a loving and caring consciousness that supports everyone equally. This All-That-Is includes everything and judges nothing. Prime Creator does not interfere. This notion is so 85 different from all religious and spiritual traditions that in my disillusionment I find myself more at home with the atheists. And I also prefer not to use the term "God", "Jehovah" or "Allah" because of too many cruelties, persecutions and fundamentalists are connected to these terms, and nothing could be farer away from what I see as "All-That-Is".

On the other hand, I chat with an invisible friend called Sanat Kumara on a daily base for eighteen 90 years - as a living normality. Startling, dramatic life events set me on a more 'paranormal' course. I almost completely left the scientific world and the spiritual world now too. I set out to get to know my left brain and, in addition, my heart. And my soul began to unfold in me, it was like waking up after a long sleep and I realized: There had to be much more to discover under this heaven than I had been told! And as any tradition or religion could ever tell me. At the same time, my mind kept 95 working at full speed, always convinced that there had to be a natural explanation for everything.
And I wanted to find it, no matter which blind spots I would come across! I dived for puzzle pieces wherever I suspected I lacked a connection to the bigger picture.

Presumably you do it that way, too, otherwise you would not read this book. Your gut feeling is the most important sensory instrument in precarious situations, it can ideally complement your seeing, 100 hearing and feeling, even if you have not already awakened all the other medial senses. If this book has fallen into your hands and you read, understand and implement it to the end, chances are that you do not have to worry: you will find the safe passage. You already had that feeling before the book came to you. I'm sure if the Asian holidaymakers and the locals had still been connected with their gut feeling at Christmas, with their intuition (the female half of the brain), and their feeling 105 (heart), and if they had followed their impulses as a medium does, then on the day of the tsunami, they might have accidentally planned a trip inland and only heard of the catastrophe from the news.

They were then 'just lucky'. Surely that happened exact the same way then and certainly saved some people 'accidentally'. How stupid are we not to train this medial sense and to ignore it instead, and do not believe in its existence because scientists say it does not exist! Do not be stupid! There is a 110 natural explanation for everything and we will find it together. Do not stand by what we are taught as certain knowledge. If Schliemann had only listened to the scholars of his time and had not taken Homer seriously, a poetry based on oral tradition, he would never have found Troy. For Schliemann, archeology was a hobby, a passion. The experts of his time have ridiculed him with his confidence in a poetry based only on oral tradition. Until he found a ruin of the city, actual several cities on top 115 of each other. Professionals will not be convinced otherwise unless you dig out a concrete alternative and follow it, rather than speculating on it. Do not listen to the mainstream professionals who rely on solid knowledge, they often have high-paying posts to defend. They've always been very quick at attacking and ridiculing outsiders. So, in a dangerous situation like today, do you really want to wait until influential people with competence titles retire or have blessed the time, 120 and fresh young scientists can finally prove their new theories and insights to expand and sharpen your vision? Do you think that we have so much time left?

I am now convinced, like the Hopi, that the world has succumbed several times. It was an experience for all the Homo Sapiens. For whole civilizations. And for the face of the whole earth.
And even the fragile natural balance of the planet is not for the first time massively disturbed by us 125 humans. In addition, the earth itself has also undergone cycles of renewal and transformation, changing even entire continents forever. Whether these global changes were triggered by interaction with natural or civilizational factors does not matter. Our Christian tradition also knows at least the deluge. It probably goes back to the much older Gilgamesh epic of the Sumerians, and the story of the Great Flood is also present in almost every other oral tradition worldwide. The religions then 130 interpreted it as a punishment of God according to the motto: "Be good and keep the rules - or you will be punished!" Also, there are many current religious people that expect the return of the Messiah, and then the human souls are harvested and sent to heaven or to hell. The latest court is imminent, even among the Hopi. Only those who follow the religious rites will survive.
Armageddon is also not an achievement of Christianity and the biblical revelation of John alone.

135 Islam, too, is expecting the return of Issa (= Jesus) and the Jews in their faith, of course, still expect their Messiah, they just do not believe like Christians, that Jesus already was the Messiah. The Hopi and with them many other Indian cultures also live in anticipation of their white brother. The conquistadors in central Amerika had an easy game with them: The Indians expected the true, white brother 'Pahana' and were led to believe that the intruders were Pahana and his people. But the 140 Spanish were not the true white brother. The Indians awaited him in a flying shield. By that they probably meant an UFO. Incidentally, the Hopi also believe that they did not develop on earth, they consider themselves 'star people'. They believe they come from the Pleiades. And before that they came from Lyra, a Ring Nebula they call the Eye of God. The end of a world is synonymous with the end of a dream for them. For the Hopi also aliens and flying saucers are real. They have 145 apparently been visited more often. Can you ignore this and go on with your prejudice – that there are no UFO's and no alien visits? This will prevent you from seeing the bigger picture I'll come to.
Of course, after reading this book, you can again believe in the nonexistence of Aliens and UFOs, at least until a saucer lands in your allotment. But I also ask you: how much of what you consider to be secure knowledge of humanity, have you actual checked yourself personally? And what reason is 150 there to make the UFO phenomenon so ridiculous that no serious mainstream journalist may deal with it? There is no reason at all for us laymen to deny their existence so vehemently, right? You do not make fun of other, rarely occurring events, such as snow in the Sahara. Please turn on your medial sense, if the powerful of this world and their press use the ridiculousness, to keep you from a topic! The Hopi have, as I said, an oral tradition that goes far beyond the Flood. The Flood was only 155 the last end of the world of which they collectively remember. Their memory goes back further. For this book, the Hopi are therefore particularly interesting: A people who lived with the world's downfall, a people that survived, especially so far, all but should be able to give us clues how we do it best this time and that's the explicit aim of this book.

The Indian tribe of the Hopi lives in the area of the 'Four Corners' in the United States, where the 160 four states of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado border each other and whose borderlines form a cross. Their mythology tells also of the Great Flood, as it is handed down in almost all older cultures worldwide. But besides they know of two other world endings before it. And these older worlds were not destroyed by water. With the Flood only the last world went under, they counted it the third world. We are now living in the fourth world. And they even know that our descendants 165 will face more downfalls. There will be three more.

In peoples with a strong oral tradition, we often find that they also "remember" the future with prophecies for all people. Prophecies are an important part of any culture that relies not only on purely masculine, logical and scientific thinking and living out of a single brain half, as if the 170 second half did not exist. Heart, mind, soul and intuition are in almost all primitive peoples (who still live with nature) even more important for their life than rational logical thinking. For them, important prophecies and meaningful dreams for a peaceful, fulfilling life are simply part of living in harmony with creation.

Many of these peoples believe that we have fallen out of harmony with our civilization and that this will have consequences. We cannot deny that our civilization has also broken down on 'primitive' 175 peoples and threatened their way of life. It is not my goal to differentiate here, because we are all under threat. The entire human family is currently going through the end of the world and eventually the countries and cultures that are still doing well can no longer blame their problems on the other countries, and just go ahead. Our problems will come back to us. They already do, they are on the way. Western civilization has made great strides in many fields of science, freeing us from all 180 sorts of narrow beliefs. But maybe we are over the target now and should approach other ideas carefully again. The thinking and, above all, the feelings and actions of the Indians and other peoples must seem strange and illogical. For a long time, our civilization has even ridiculed these cultures and discriminated against them as inferior, backward and childish. As a "primitive" precursor of our own way of life, which we defined as superior. They were even allowed to be 185 murdered and expropriated and their country overrun because one simply viewed the land as uninhabited. Whole continents were settled in this arrogance, as if there were no locals there. The original population has been displaced, forced into a new way of life, or even genocide committed on them. What makes such a saying "Only a dead Indian is a good Indian" by radical settlers in the Wild West different from the Nazis to Jews? This technically and militarily superior, aggressive, 190 destructive and exploitative Western civilization spread throughout the globe, but so far only the Australian government has apologized to its Aborigines for at least the suffering inflicted on the Australian Aborigines. Centuries before Hitler, the idea of a master race was practiced all over the world: by the Portuguese, Spaniards, English and French, who, as colonial powers, seized the resources of the whole earth. And the people in their colonized states were considered second-class 195 people. Germany was just hanging on to colonialism later. Now it's capital and economics that continue to explode and exploit to an even greater extent, and some new colonial powers like China have joined in.

"Only a dead Indian is a good Indian" was the conflict resolution of the Wild West. How else could 200 one have robbed the land of the indigenous people with a clear conscience and removed their livelihood from being declared unworthy of life? What happened there with the Indians, you can confidently call a genocide from today's point of view: Today live only a little more than a thousandth of the number of Indians than at the time of Columbus! Of the sixty million Indians in the United States alone, there were only eighty thousand in the middle of the last century. Well, the 205 genocide was more by repression and deprivation of livelihood than by the direct assassination, the armed conflicts were rare and asymmetrical, the Indians had no chance. But when the Indians resisted the colonization of their own land by white strangers, they too were forcefully convinced to tolerate it. Yes, they were even forcibly relocated and placed in such small reserves that they could no longer maintain their old way of life. The civilization of North America was not based on a 210 peaceful coexistence, a multiculturalism (the humid dream of today's Europeans), a fruitful Synergy of cultures, because the Europeans who arrived, felt with their knowledge, their way of life and some even with their religion far superior to the natives. They did not even dream of acquiring the way of life of the Indians! They did not care, they did not even want to meet them. The European migrants coming to America did not want integration, they just wanted a new country for their own parallel culture. And the Indians were just in the way. You can watch this game wherever cultures 215 expand into the lands of other cultures.

The freedom-loving, emerging democracy of the United States was based on the genocide of the indigenous peoples, slave labor by black slaves, and the exploitation of incoming Mexicans.
America is the land of unlimited possibilities, they said. For whom? Did the Indians and black people know that? Are they experiencing it at least now? How should a country credibly represent 220 and disseminate the idea of democracy worldwide that still could not implement democracy within itself? I probably should not say that, it could be taboo to talk that way about our overseas friends.
Well, the many real US friends I have met from this country would even agree with me: they, too, wanted a different policy. There are only a few countries that you should not criticize in their behavior, the US is one of them. The powerful have always had the monopoly on the interpretation 225 of their history. They also have the power of interpretation in current politics. You can tell by the fact that you want to censor yourself or me, automatically, unconsciously. But human indignity and freedom are either for everyone or for no one, right? We are one big human family.

The Hopi, too, had to deal with the invasion of their land by refugees, and they did so in a way that we all can use as a model now in Europe: peaceful and helpful. Nevertheless, they vehemently 230 advocated their own tradition and saved it from disappearing as best they could. They helped neighborly and compassionate, but only the strangers who adopted their way of life were allowed to stay. This was seen as prove that they had integrated in the Hopi lifestyle. Otherwise the stranger did not fit and had to move on.

I have to tell you, I evaluated the various books on the Hopi, while sitting in Old Germany. I never 235 met a Hopi personally. Even at the risk that I thus idealize them substantially I want to make my point. Karl May has done this in his books with the Apaches. On me his characters Winnetou and Old Shatterhand had certainly had character-forming effects, even if neither Karl May nor I have ever visited the Indians. Hopi means "the peaceful" and the Hopi are only a small tribe in the Native American variety. Today, historical research assumes that the first of these aborigines immigrated 240 via the Bering Strait into North America during and after the Ice Age, and then spread out from there to the south. This fits well with the tradition of many Indian tribes whose history goes back only a few centuries or millennia. The Hopi, on the other hand, are sure that they came from the south and before that from a continent in the Pacific. They first traveled through Central America and North America to the great, impenetrable wall of ice in the north, then east and west to the 245 coast. After that, they returned to the place where they still settle today. They also remember a second wave of immigration of peoples in the north across the Bering Strait, much later. So far, they have a very different story from the rest of the Indians, who are well known to have immigrated over the North from Asia. That sounds interesting, right? But you certainly will not find it in any historical textbook! Is it than less true? Try an experiment with me: Concentrate on the statement 250 that the Hopi did not come over the Bering Strait, but from the South and think in the command tone, "Truth!". If you are already a bit more experienced in your intuition, you will now clearly perceive whether it is true or not. The truth feels light and vibrant and the lie heavy and dark. A good sense works like a polygraph. And of course, you must train it like playing the piano. Do the same thing calmly when dealing with people. Think in the conversation just "truth!" And look the 255 other straight in the eye. And then you know who you can trust and who you cannot. You do not have to say anything, the other one will not even notice that you are receiving his truth (energetically you're scanning your counterpart). Just act according to your new knowledge. Trust your intuition, your inner knowledge, you will still need it.

260 But back to the Hopi and their doomsday. When the Hopi arrived at Four Corners, they met a man called Massau, whom they also called the Bone Man or the Great Spirit. It was not the creator or his nephew, only one who had done something wrong on the just-lost world and now led a simple life to repentance. He offered them his homeland as a home if, in exchange, they accepted their special role in the history. Therefore, the Hopi made a covenant with Massau, the Great Spirit, and declared that they were willing to maintain the balance of the earth with their culture and especially with 265 their ceremonies and dances. Since then, the Hopi see themselves as guardians of Mother Earth, guardians of animals and plants, servants of the earth. They believe they are now living in the center of the fourth world, which, according to their knowledge, lies in their land, the land that was given to them by Massau. Therefore, they are also convinced that everything that happens to them, their land and their nature will happen all over the world, because they feel like a microcosm in the 270 macrocosm. They have made an extraordinary effort to fulfill the contract with Massau and to fulfill their role, even as it became increasingly difficult after the arrival of the whites. The white civilization behaved very aggressively towards them and dominated them with all their compulsion until today. If the Hopi are right with their idea of the microcosm and its transference to the macrocosm, then refugee flows will set in motion worldwide, and that is also accurate. We have 275 been able to observe this more and more for years and this further intensified. For centuries the Hopi lived peacefully on their land, even for a long time, when the other Indian tribes on the coasts and in fertile settlements had long been threatened with extinction by the whites. This was mainly because the Hopi had settled after their migration and consecration of the country in a region where neither milk nor honey flowed. A barren land, little water, almost desert. That hardly aroused 280 desires, at least until they came across mineral resources in the last century. What did the peaceful Hopi do in the face of the invasion of people of a completely different culture, who also feel completely superior in the matter of religion, culture and economics?
Since the big first migration wave into Europe we are in a similar situation, whether we have already recognized this or not. On the one hand, more and more people think holistically, 285 sustainably and buy organic products and love, protect and guard the balance in their environment. And there are more and more vegetarians among us, who no longer want to kill and eat animals. More and more people do not want violence and wars. More and more young people are looking for a simple life. In their way of life, they become symbolically 'Hopi'. After two world wars and such a violent history, the majority of humanity, at least in Europe, has enough of war and armed conflicts.
290 People yearn for holistic thinking and acting, for harmony and peace. They are longing for a meaningful, fulfilled life in freedom. Their heart is open and helpful, and they would probably no longer want to defend their national borders or the fences of their property with weapons. I do not think that even one German seriously imagines that we give shooting orders at the German or at an European border. And how else could we stop migrants? That sort of violence we left behind with 295 the fall of the Berlin Wall, right? On the other hand, are those who are now pouring across our borders into our country as peaceful as we are? Or do they, like the whites in the colonization of North America, also regard the native German population as culturally and religiously inferior, unbelieving, weak, exploitable and, moreover, that the young women are dishonorable? Do they care about our country, our care system while bringing their whole culture here piggyback? If they 300 see their religion as superior to ours – and the prevailing atheism of the European population will give them a testimony – and we are openly exposing our lived values to any change, it is only a matter of time which culture will prevail. The Hopi have tried to solve the conflict with others in the last centuries as such: everyone was welcome, who wanted to live with them and wanted to live modestly and with nature. And who made his own living. Who wanted to learn from them, who brought respect for them and respect for their culture and interest in their heritage. And who wanted to live like them. Hopi said for example about the Navajo, who were settled in a reserve as 305 neighbors around them: "They do not understand what it means to agree in kindness. That's what the Hopi want. We do not want to drive people out of their homes or hate them, we want to live with them. But it's hard when the others are in the majority and do not want that. We cannot build walls around us or defend our borders with weapons, we have to learn how to live together the best." As I said the Hopi lived a modest, simple life and kept their oral, ritual tradition and lore as well as they could. Only a few times it came to extremes and they resorted to violence to defend their own culture and religious beliefs. Once they killed two missionaries who had attacked their culture directly. They wanted to suppress the traditions of the Hopi as false and evil and sought the extinction of their ceremonies. The Hopi, on the other hand, simply wanted to live in peace, without any missionaries. They were content with their culture, while the missionaries sowed fear, aggression, and discord among them, especially in a know-it-all way. When it came to reservations, the Hopi were in fortune, they were not expelled: their original settlement area was only greatly reduced and became their own Reserve declared. The displaced, nomadic Native American Navajo tribe was added and settled around them. They now had to share their land with the Navajos. The way of life of the two peoples did not get along as well. It went much more similar to Cain and Abel from the Bible. The Hopi as a peasantry, centered on the cultivation of corn, now had constant conflicts with the neighbors, whose cattle trampled their fields or devoured empty. These were border disputes, as they go through the whole of human history: peasants against nomadic herders, a classic conflict of interest over land use. Different views on honesty and corruption further complicated the coexistence of the Hopi and Navajos. And there was less and less room to live for both peoples. Surviving the old way became more and more difficult. The governmental bodies of the whites also constantly invented new humiliations, harassment and more. We should be grateful to the Hopi for keeping their peculiarities under this pressure. They became great teachers of peace and they warn us of the changes that will inevitably come. They kept their promise that they gave Massau.

I do not write a book about the Hopi or their ceremonies, there are others who can do that much better (see bibliography at the end). I have found another, independent access to this tradition, as my own prophecy. It was even that I first discovered my own version of the story and only then took care of these traditions. I came across the Hopi, studied the literature and was amazed. The first three worlds were destroyed according to the Hopi tradition because of the corruption and cunning of the people, and only a few very religious traditionalists who had followed certain rules, got help and rescue. For the same reason, then the fourth world, ours, would soon be destroyed. First, I thought that the world endings of the Hopi would have to be thought of as a destruction of large and leading civilizations, coupled with processes of transformation of the earth's surface, which allowed the entire land masses to rise or fall. For example, the Atlantic catastrophe (Flood) ended the third world of the Hopi (I call it 'Atlantis', even if the ancestors of the Hopi lived in the Pacific Ocean across the continent). And after every destruction, people had to start almost at zero again. In the meantime, I can better understand and correlate individual isolated fragments of my own memory, because I've always been there: Today, I assume that each of the traditional doomsday devastations was at the same time dimension catastrophes and the new world - albeit still up the same earth - was located in another, each lower dimension. More about that later.

Hopi's creation story is told by writer Frank Waters: "In the beginning, Taiowa, the creator, created his nephew Sótuknang to create places for life. Out of nowhere, Sótuknang created nine universes or worlds: one for Taiowa, one for himself and seven others for extra life. The first three of these worlds, Tokpela, Tokpa and Kuskurza, were already inhabited and then destroyed due to human corruption and malice. Each time one of the worlds went down, Hopi's faithful ancestors were buried and saved from destruction, to re-emerge and repopulate later in the next world." According to Waters books, dating back to the 1960s the Hopis believe that humanity currently lives in the fourth world, which they call "Túwaqachi". Like the previous worlds, this fourth world is also predicted to be destroyed because of mankind's corruption. The Creator himself does not act, he is, as they say, endless space without form and without time, he himself and his world has no beginning and no end. If you use 'dimension' or 'universe' for the term 'world', you get very close to the idea of today's metaphysics. In this first world, there is no life, it is the immeasurable emptiness 360 in the mind of the Creator. The only thing our Creator himself created was his distant relative, whom the Hopi, interesting enough, did not call his son, because he was apparently not so closely related – e.g. not so much like him. To this nephew he transferred the creation of all nine worlds.

The nephew, in turn, got his uncle's feedback after each step, so it would be good what he had done, he is still acting in perfect accord with the Creator. The nephew is the first actor to fill the plan of 365 life in endless space and reveal the creation. He creates nine worlds, today we would speak esoterically-spiritually of nine dimensions. The first is reserved for the Creator alone, the second for his nephew, and then seven more worlds for life. Even in the subordinate world, which is reserved for the nephew, there cannot yet be life. Editors and meditators who have experienced this level describe it as pure sound, pure light, as pure geometry, as boundless love. They say that the whole 370 world is disappearing around them and they know with absolute certainty that this level is the truth and our very essence. The Buddhists strive for their experience as pure emptiness, an emptiness in which everything exists without judgment and can simply be there. The German Mystic Hildegard described them in their visions as chorus of angels and sublime-sweet music. An empire of harmonious sounds. Isn't it fascinating to find similarity in the Hopi story, among the many myths 375 of creation of the cultures of the world, which in the language of a simple peasant culture without larger hierarchies and secret societies describes exactly what crystallizes out there as imagination, where in our modern age physics, spirituality and mysticism are gained in a meditative experience?
One of my spiritual teachers, to whom I owe a lot, and who was at the same time an atomic physicist and clinical psychologist, Danaan Parry†, once said, "A modern nuclear physicist becomes 380 either spiritual or crazy." But back to the Hopi creation story. The creator's nephew now distributed water, air and life on all seven downstream worlds. One must conclude from this account that they were all created together, not one after the other. It seems that only humans experience it one after the other, so our next world already exist. The nephew gives the earth form, substance, direction, goal and a beginning and an 385 end. Then he calls other actors on the plan, because "what is life without sound and joyful movement?" I would like to point out that the Europeans believed at the same time they met the first Hopi that the earth is a disc and even other Indian creation myths spoke only of a turtle in a sea as their created world. And the Hopi did not only know that the earth is a sphere, as we'll see shortly, it gets even better: Creator and his nephew intended a development (or evolution) of life.
390 Therefore, his nephew created a spider to help him with it. He gave her the power to create life. She has been given the knowledge, the wisdom and the love to bless all newly created worlds. The spider took soil, mixed it with her saliva and formed two beings, twins. She covered them with her cloak of creative wisdom and sang the Song of Creation above them. The twins awoke and asked, "Why are we here?" The spider had already asked that before. And as people are indirectly 395 implicated in this narrative, anyone who hears this story should ask the same question, "Why are we here?" The spider said to the first twin, "You should help keep this world in order once life is upon it. Clamp the earth everywhere by laying hands on it. "Then she turned to the other twin and said, "And you go across the land and send out a sound so that it can be heard all over the world. You will be called Echo, for all notes are echoes of the Creator." The second twin sounded all the 400 vibrational centers of the earth from pole to pole, so that the whole earth trembled, and the universe trembled in resonance. In this way he made the earth an instrument of sounds to deliver his message, so that the praise of the Creator of all things echoed in it. When everything was tuned to the sound of the Creator, the second twin was sent to the South Pole and his brother to the North Pole. Both should keep the world in the right circulation from there. Do you get it? The Hopi 405 already knew about the axis rotation of the Earth, which means indirectly, they already had our today's idea of the planet, the sun and the sky. That these forces also affect the seasons and the weather and work in a fragile and vulnerable balance, was their basic knowledge and their motivation to protect this balance and never disturb it. Is it not amazing? How could the Hopi know of these forces and the rotating Earth axes, which indirectly presupposes the knowledge that the 410 world (earth) is a sphere and that these twin forces are apparently also decisive for the orbits around the sun and the galactic center? These forces are crucial to just about anything, including the right distance to the Sun, for example, so that life can even exist. The Earth itself, going through seven stages one after the other and experiencing seven worlds from its beginning to the end, has been brought in resonance to the universe. In esoteric-spiritual basic knowledge, all creation is vibration and resonates with each other. Here the simple people were explained this connection so that they could understand it. The Hopi knew about the vibration of matter at the bottom of everything, and above all the earth's natural vibration, the Schumann frequency, and gravity, which consolidates everything and holds the planet together. For that is what the two twins apparently are concerned with: One brings the world into resonance with the creation and fits it into the solar and galactic movement system and places it in an ideal orbit around the sun, the other solidifies matter by gravity. The story reports that the first twin sustained the solid form of the earth, while the other allowed the air to circulate in a gentle, ordered motion. Also, he should continue to sound a call either of joy or of warning from the vibration centers. Today, one would say that the twin in the north made sure that the magnetic field generator was launched inside the earth and since then kept the magnetic field of the earth upright, while the second in the south was responsible for the Schumann frequency, i.e. the earth's natural vibration. Incidentally, this Schumann frequency has behaved unusually well over the last few decades and almost doubled, while previously, as far as physicists can look back, it remained almost the same, apart from minor fluctuations. The earth itself definitely changes! Of course, the Spaniards, who had to deal with the Inquisition at their homes at the time of the invasion of America, could not understand anything about these things. And the Hopi also kept their knowledge secret. Only when the world situation became more and more threatening in the last century and most of their prophecies had already arrived, they announced publicly the end of the world. They repeatedly demanded that they be heard by the UN in New York. Only after several attempts they succeeded, but their appearance remained relatively ineffective. Meanwhile, the indigenous peoples around the world are also meeting and exchanging ideas independently, trying to teach their younger and apparently very stupid siblings of Western civilization, always in an effort to prevent the worst. Because these peoples usually also know through their experience that humans have either an intensifying or mitigating effect on the natural forces of the earth and should use them for the good.

But again, back to the Creation myth of the Hopi. The spider shaped for the first world and all subsequent different worlds the trees, bushes, plants, flowers and all kinds of seed and nut carriers to clothe the earth. She also gave a name to every life. Then she shaped the animals as well. This is no longer explicitly spoken of as 'creating' because creating - as modern initiates know today - happens exclusively in the mind - and has nothing to do with concrete shaping and action. Creator and his nephew were very happy with the spider's results, is then reported. The world was good, they said. There was only one final step left to complete the plan. This time around, the spider woman collected earth in four colors: yellow, red, white and black. Thus, she formed human beings in the image of the nephew. So, the Hopi also knew that in other parts of the world, people of other skin color existed, even though they had not yet met them! In man, the mystery of creation was revealed, and the first humans began to breathe. The warming love of the sun dried their damp forehead and the soft spot on their head hardened. Now man was perfectly formed and strengthened and proudly confronted with his Creator. The spider woman instructed the first humans. She said, "That's the sun. In it, you will meet your Father, the Creator, for the first time. "You should always remember the three phases of your creation: the mystery of life, the ways of life, and the warmth of love arising, in the dawn light phases this will be reflected. For therein is the plan of your creator for your life contained."

The first world for life was still perfectly in balance. People got a common language and wisdom and procreation. To their question 'Why am I here?' they got the answer, they should simply enjoy life and thank the Creator. The Creator and his nephew would have given them the world to live on and be happy. In return, they demanded above all reverence for the Creator. They should develop wisdom and harmony and awe and never forget. They were also instructed to use their vibrational centers to help the Creator and his nephew follow his plan! This remark is referring to the chakras and to balance them. Spiritual people who deal with chakras and higher structures down to dimensional lattices today will conclude that the first world humans were still fully enlightened and 465 lived in intimate connection with the Creator. That must have been the paradise that we collectively remember! It really existed, and the Hopi remember it. The first world was haunted by oblivion, not the subsequent evil. For as the people of the First World began to forget to meet the Creator and His creation with awe, wisdom, and praise, using their vibrational centers (chakras) less and lesser and 470 no longer following the plan, and instead simply perishing themselves, they began to argue among themselves. Eventually the situation reached a point where the Creator and his nephew decided that the world must be destroyed. Forgetting had finally spread so far that even human seducers appeared, inspiring judgment and separation. They claimed that some were better than others and certainly better and higher than the animals. After all, the guardian spirit of the animals could not 475 help but make the animals savage and shy, so that they did not fall prey to the dangerous humans.

At first, humans and animals had lived together in trust and communicated telepathically, but that was over then in the last days of the first world. Even among themselves, the people were wild and warring. In the end, this world had to be destroyed. It is said that it was destroyed by fire. Volcanoes erupted, crevices rebuilt, and fire even rained from the sky. The nephew of the Creator did not let all humans perish. A few that he could still reach in their inner voice, he led to gather in a certain place.
480 And then it becomes even almost biblical in the description: Those who still could hear this inner voice and also followed her confidently, received the sight, to see a certain cloud during the day and to follow it. And at night a star. These Hopi got the message not to take anything with them and stop only when cloud and star stopped. The other people simply could not perceive these signs and just kept going. From everywhere, people disappeared and set off. They followed their medial 485 perception. Sometimes people came along who could not even perceive these signs but trusted those who saw them. They gathered in one place and were in good spirits, say the Hopi. As different as they looked and lived, they were of the same mind and understood each other. The creator's nephew came by in person, led them up a hill, and stomped his feet a few times on the ground. The ant people lived in the hill and now opened their home for the refugees. The nephew of the Creator 490 instructed the people to descend deeply into the caves of the ant colony. There they should live safely and learn to be diligent in the summer and to gather food for the winter. And that it was warm in such caves in winter and cold in summer, they also learned from experience. That was already a preparation for the second world, in which it would not be so paradisiacal anymore. The land of milk and honey definitely came to an end. The ants lived peacefully and followed the plan of the 495 Creator. They had warehouses and dwellings there and crystals that gave light. The fire-cleaning out there on the surface raged so long that the supplies they shared with humans eventually became very scarce. The Hopi say that's why the ants have such a narrow waist.
I've been thinking about the ants for a long time, because in other stories of the Hopi they also 500 appear with backpacks containing seeds and accompanied the first settlers on their hike on the New World. And they played the flute and created good vibrations in this way. Since they behaved in a similar way to humans, but also acted completely in the plan of the Creator, they could not have been animals. But it was not until I later came across the mention of aliens in the same literature and at the same time found 'Simon Parkes' on the internet that I could figure it out: this ant colony had 505 to be a planetary underground colony of the Mantid or other insectoid humanoids! The Mantid (German: mantis) look similar to this insect - or ants, but there are other insectoid forms of extraterrestrial life that could also have been those helpers. Whether they really lived in the perfect plan and in harmony with the creation and saw themselves as such, we do not know: For the Hopi they did it very clearly. I myself suspect that all life forms are in constant evolution, that was finally the mission to life in this creation.
510 In the tradition of the Hopi it goes on like this: The nephew of the Creator thanked the ant folk at the end of the catastrophic events, said that it was safe now to live on the Earth's surface again, and announced at the same time that people would come again to the ant people at the end of this second world. He was already expecting the destruction of this second world! That's only logical, he had already created them all and knew how to continue. The humans had already lost some of their 515 most precious higher dimensional structures, which harmoniously connected them with the whole of creation (more about this in the third chapter), even the earth itself had lost these structures. It is said that the nephew of the Creator now created land where water had previously been and vice versa. People should not be reminded of anything and start completely new. All life was reseeded, but the animals no longer trusted the humans. This world was not as beautiful as the first, it was lower in vibration. And again, he instructed them to multiply and be happy, but also to remember the Creator and to praise Him. People multiplied quickly, and they were always telepathically connected. And as their crown chakra was still wide open on their head and their pineal gland was still fully active, they felt close to their Creator and sang praises of praise on him. However, life itself had become a bit more exhausting. The weather was not so easy, and the seasons made a precaution necessary. The people of the Second World lived in the first settlements, they built houses and villages, invented agriculture, made supplies and began to travel and trade among themselves. So, as long as telepathy still worked well with each other, I suspect that no one could betray the other and put his own advantage over that of another. So, when it is reported that they had everything they needed, but still wanted more, until envy, resentment, quarrels, and wars were the order of the day, indirectly, if you take the tradition seriously, you must assume that over time, people's ability to telepathy also disappeared. Eventually, they even forgot to sing their praises for the Creator and instead sang praises for their own goods. And the few who still clung to the old songs were laughed at. No question: this world was also coming to an end. And again, the most faithful people were gathered and housed safely by the ant colony. The degenerating development of humanity continued. In this ending second world, the structures and sacred geometries that connected humans to all creation must have been so severely destroyed for all humans that they had to eat like animals. They had to become as physical as the animals. Eating was not necessary before and we will go into that in the third chapter. Here only this: With each end of the world the earth and humanity lost more structures, which formerly connected them with the whole of creation. When it was time for the ending this time the Creator's nephew ordered the twins to leave their posts on the earth axes. The Hopi are telling that the earth then was completely unbalanced, that it staggered and even turned twice over. Mountains plunged into the sea, seas flooded the land. And as the planet swirled through the cold space (!) - they say - it completely froze into ice. For many years, the whole planet was covered by a thick layer of ice. For me, this sounds like it was not just a 'normal' pole shift at this end of the world, as the Earth, according to today's scientists, experiences regularly. She apparently left the old orbit around the sun at the same time and whirled around space until she found her new, her current orbit. This fits in nicely with the theory that between Mars and Jupiter, at the height of today's asteroid belt, was originally a water planet called Tiamat, which broke apart by the approach or flyby of another massive celestial body and split into two larger and many much smaller parts. The two larger parts were also simultaneously catapulted out of orbit. The largest piece (now called Earth) whirled through the space and took the other piece (the moon) as a satellite, while the smaller remnants formed into the asteroid belt. And with this began the third world of the Hopi. They tell about this next world that she existed for a very long time. The twins returned to their posts in the new orbit and with a great shock the planet began to turn again. Now the earth moved again a steady course and the ice began to melt. New mountains, plains, seas and countries emerged. Also, the life on the third world was rearranged. There were even completely new and different species. When everything was ready for humans, the nephew of the Creator brought the survivors out of the underground dwellings of the ants. This time, however, he expressly admonished them: "If I no longer hear you sing praises, I know for a fact that you have become evil again!" The people multiplied with great speed and became very numerous. They made very fast progress, having the knowledge and experience of the last world they evidently remembered. This is how big cities, states and cultures came into being. The further they developed their own worldly structures, the more difficult it became for them to live in accordance with the plan of the Creator. Their worldly affairs soon left them no time for their praises. The further the development progressed, the more difficult it became. Then people also used their reproductive ability in the worst possible way: A woman, (who ruled Atlantis - my note), it is said in the tradition, slept with many men and made a shield made of fur. With the help of her power of procreation she could it fly through the air. More and more people then learned to build such shields and fly them through the air. Soon they used these shields for warfare. The people of the country where the Hopi originated also defended themselves this way. The technical development of this world was much further than ours today, the Hopi say.

The Canadian Miriam Delicado told a similar story with strong parallels to the traditions of the Hopi. Miriam, who was kidnapped and taught several times by an alien race (she calls them the 'Tall Blonds') gives more information about this third world (her autobiographical book is freely available on the Internet). It was initially an ideal society, a great success, and above all the experiences that were possible between husband and wife were great and extended the experience of the extraterrestrial visitors which were very satisfied. Humanity had a very high level of knowledge, people could travel outside of their bodies and knew that there was no death. They had learned that they were immortal and always took on a different shape in another life. However, they lacked maturity and emotional and spiritual growth. They knew no boundaries and no stopping. After all, what could happen to them, they were immortal! And so, they did not stop at the plan of life (genetics) and began experiments on humans and animals. They changed the functions of the life forms and made quite terrible and tormenting genetic experiments in human and animal mixtures. In Atlantis, people also had great knowledge in the use of crystals, first the use was well-meaning but then also the crystals were used as weapons, as in my own memories in the third chapter it will be further elaborated. In other sources I found that, for example, they created hybrids of human and animal that were considered slaves. Most people have lost all compassion and respect for creation, including their dealings with each other. These experiments found a resonance in Greek mythology, where such creatures are mentioned as, for example, half horse, half human. From the originally ideal society dictatorships finally developed and the world plunged into chaos. This time the faithful humans, who still clung to the praises, were trapped by the spider woman in hollow bamboos, before the tide hit them with all its might and the capsules swirled in the air. After all, the earth was covered with water for a long time, only the mountain peaks looked out of the water. This narrative finds its parallel with the Noah's Ark, with which he saves himself from the deluge. But then the story of the Hopi goes on interesting: When the tides had calmed down, they got out of the bamboo, but were immediately commissioned to build boats from reeds and row to the east or to sail, because their country would go down and that new land must first emerge from the floods. In one of the most detailed descriptions they fled with their small boats over a still remaining island chain to the east, while not only their continent but behind them all the islands slowly sank into the sea, 'their stepping stones in the sea' what they call them, which the nephew of the Creator had left to save them. Only the last island did not sink into the sea, always reminding them where they came from. It is the island that we know today as the Easter Island. East of this island they went ashore, because between the two sunken continents of Atlantis and Lemuria the Rocky Mountains had emerged from the sea now. Wherever they went, they started cultures, but there were always a few who feared the same mistakes would happen again. As soon as they recognized the signs, they packed their things, let the others alone with their ideas, and moved on. The jungle made their survival difficult, and they reported that as well. And that they were always on the coast to the north on the way. They remember building one of the Mayan cities, a red city, it was a place where great knowledge was passed on. But their ancestors also left this city again. If there were disagreements, they just moved on separately. Conversely, it always came to associations, if it fit again. Eventually, the Hopi ancestors reached the mesas where they live today. There they met a rather disagreeable figure who ordered the soil, and who later on was often depicted as Massau, the bone man, but some also consider him to be the Great Spirit. They asked him if they could stay and use the land with him. He was ready to agree on the condition that they live as modest as he did. But first they would have to dedicate the whole new land and therefore cross it in all directions until it does not go any further. So, they moved on, east to the coast, west to the coast and north to a barrier of ice and snow. Then they returned and settled at the Four Corners. This fourth world, our presentday world, was now a complete world, they say. It contained everything: beautiful and ugly, light and exhausting, sublime and profane, fertile and barren, cold 620 and hot. Wealth beside poverty or knowledge beside stupidity: There was everything in contradictions, because people should learn to choose. That would decide how to proceed. People were also given everything they needed for spiritual growth, that's what they should concentrate on.

And the Great Spirit appointed the Hopi to be the Keepers of the Earth. They should learn in this time cycle the teachings of the earth, the plants that grow out of the earth, and what is edible and 625 what can heal, so that they could share that knowledge with their older brothers and sisters when they meet again. That would make something good on earth. Incidentally, many of our vegetables today, such as corn or tomatoes, come from America. Great Spirit commissioned the yellow race in the south to be the guardian of the wind. They should study everything about the sky, about the air, about breathing, and how we absorb it into our spiritual development. And in the end, they should 630 share that with us all. This is how the pranayama, the yoga of breathing and the teaching of chi came about. And the chakra doctrine as a vortex of energy of the inner breath. The black race in the west he gave the order to be keeper of the water and to learn everything about the water, because it stands above the other elements. It is the humblest and the most powerful element at the same time.
The sparing use and equitable distribution of water is what is apparently being learned there through 635 drought and desertification. In the north, he gave the white race the order to be the keeper of the fire. At the heart of things, inside a motor, you find fire, they say. Nuclear power plants, blast furnaces, vehicles, airplanes and rockets go back to the whites. All of our previous means of transportation work via explosion and combustion. I myself am glad that the sexual power as drive for flying discs has not been rediscovered so far! This is, so to speak, our own inner fire, which the 640 Indians call 'kundalini' - the serpent power. But who knows what is being researched in secret military laboratories? The fire consumes and moves. It brings change. Therefore, it was the whites who moved across the earth, consuming resources, and facilitating encounters between people worldwide. They will eventually make people reunite into a family.

In the third world, humans could fly with their shields but were also visited by aliens who came 645 with such shields. As I already mentioned, the Hopi know a Third World technique that was flown with sexual power, they call it flying shields (patuwvotas). For the Hopi UFOs were so obvious that they even coined their own word for it. The hint that the people of the Atlantis and Lemuria flew these shields with their sexual power, of course, made me thoughtful, I'm like Schliemann, I believe my source once for the word. I suspect that they controlled these shields (today they would be 650 called 'saucers') by means of conscious, inner, focused, energetic steering. In short, they controlled their flying objects with their own consciousness. But they abused their sexual-creative power and fell out of the harmony of creation. And those who fall out of harmony, say the Hopi, sooner or later destroy themselves. Some Hopi believe that these flying shields are also used by the Kachinas, and that they will come back again and again when the End of the world would afford saving a small 655 part of humanity. While most of the people who fought for their lives at the end of the world's downfall conquered the great sea in their small reeds, the most loyal of the faithful had already been flown in UFOs to prepare everything for them. Also in our time, the Hopi expect their true white brother Pahana with his siblings from space and a rescue by spaceships. The Hopi are convinced that other planets are also inhabited. These traditions are ancient and are amazingly similar to the 660 ideas of modern science fiction authors.

We've worked now our way through the worlds of the Hopi, and we need to talk about the signs we've already met and the rainbow warriors to better understand. Let's start with the rainbow warriors and put them in between, even if you are certainly looking forward to seeing how our current doomsday will continue according to the traditions of the Hopi. What else will happen? And 665 above all, what will destroy the world this time? If you think for a little while, you will come to it alone: It is destroyed by vibration. With the microwaves, the mobile phones, the smart devices we are well on the way. Because life itself is based on vibration, its living structures are also destroyed by chaotic vibration. Through vibration that is not in harmony with the creation. This is obvious to anyone who does not want to put his cat in the microwave. A gamma-ray flash or a supernova with 670 its radiation could be on the way to us for years. And a strong solar flare or even a sun-sneeze would also be a destruction by vibration, waves and radiation.

The story of the rainbow warriors was told among the indigenous peoples of North America, I do not want to commit myself now to the Hopi. And it was originally also a prophecy. One told oneself then, sometime in the future the animals would begin to disappear, it would be no more wolves, bears or eagles sighted. Even the big trees would disappear. And after a beautiful rainbow would have faded in the sky, there would be no rainbows anymore. After that, children would be born. And these kids would love the animals and bring them back. They would love the trees and bring back the huge trees. And they would love other people and help them live in peace. And they would also bring the beautiful rainbows back to heaven. A time would come when the keepers of legends, stories, cultural rituals, and myths were needed to restore our health. They would be the key to human survival. Then there would come a day of awakening and all people of all nations and tribes would create a new world, one of justice, peace and the renewed recognition of the Great Spirit. The warriors of the rainbow would spread the message and teach all the people of the earth how to live the way of life of the Great Spirit. They would teach them that the earth is sick because they have turned away. They would show them that this ancient being, our Creator, is full of love and understanding, and how they make the earth a heaven on earth again. These rainbow warriors came with principles similar to those of the ancient tribes. They would teach unity, love, understanding and harmony. They would feel joy, whether they were alone or in consultations. Her heart would be pure and radiate warmth, understanding and respect for all humanity. And they would be free of petty jealousy, they would love all humanity. They would understand the beauty of creation. They would find strength and beauty in their prayers and in the loneliness of life. Their children would run around freely again and enjoy the treasures of nature and Mother Earth, free from poisons and destruction. The rivers would be clear again, the forests would be abundant and beautiful, and the animals would live their lives filled with life again. The power of plants and animals would be respected again and whispering with the animals empathically-telepathically would become a way of life. The poor, the sick, and the needy would be cared for by their brothers as part of their daily lives. Their leaders would be chosen the old way, not by their political party, or who could shout the loudest, give the most, or promise the most. Not those who pronounce the greatest insults or would cause slaughter would be chosen, but the ones whose actions spoke the loudest. Those who had demonstrated their love their love, their wisdom and their courage and had shown that they acted for the good of the whole. They would be chosen as leaders because of their qualities and not because of the financial wealth that they possessed. Like the deep and life-committed elders, they would understand people with love and see to it that the boys were taught with love and the wisdom of their environment. They would show them that miracles are possible to heal this world of all diseases and restore their health and beauty.

The tasks of the Rainbow Warriors are varied and numerous. They will have to conquer terrible mountains of ignorance and face many prejudices and even hatreds. They must work with all their might and with a strong heart. They will find willing hearts and spirits to follow them on their way to give the earth back its beauty and fullness. The day will come, the narrators said, and he is not far away. Our key to survival is the return to harmony with nature, Mother Earth and all humanity.

Are you also a rainbow warrior? Or is there one among your children and grandchildren? The Rainbow Warriors are everywhere, all you must do is look around. They are to be found among the health professions and among the spiritual teachers, but also in quite normal occupations that have always existed. They themselves seek the spiritual awakening to the truth, follow their inner voice and sometimes see themselves as servants of a turn of fate. Almost all of them are aware that together they are changing the prophesied history, or at least mitigating the events and stretching them so that other solutions can be sought. Because they believe in these prophecies, they understand the seriousness of the situation and do everything so that it does not come to extremes. And that's exactly how they override these prophecies. They do not aspire to it and yet it is time for the mainstream to acknowledge that they have steadfastly lived as an alternative, followed their hearts and remained true to their purpose in life, as they have always pulled the earth away from the abyss itself.

It was they who really changed the story so that all the terrible prophecies are gone. Yes, yes, they 725 have changed the probabilities and put us on a different timeline. Because prophecy is a prophecy only as a warning of a possible or probable future, but the future is not immutable. Often such seers and dreamers publish their predictions with the motivation to avert this variant of the future after all. So, no matter how probable a future affects us and how inevitably our fate is, it is not fixed as our destiny, which we cannot escape. We always remain responsible and decide what happens here.

730 Of course, everyone decides only as a tiny part of the whole, each only in its relative power and in its relative place. But everyone is equally important, also for the Creator and for the earth. And I am convinced that this also applies to Mother Earth and to the Creator Himself. In the third chapter, I'll tell you more about our hopeful situation, which you just may not have recognized and understood, there is every reason to rejoice!

735 A prophecy must be judged by whether or not others from the same source have already fulfilled themselves, this is valid also for the Hopi prophecies. Their signs of the end of the world, for example, became public in 1997, when some Hopi elders joined forces with Dr. Ing. Robert Ghost Wolf turned to millions of listeners around the world at the Art Bells Coast to Coast Show. They talked about the imminent end of the world and about their centuries-old tradition, at which sign one could recognize that the downfall is imminent. Almost all of these signs have already arrived.
740 They were very worried. It was predicted to them that strange changes would be observed on animals long before the stem cells and genetics were discovered: there would one day be frogs with six legs, rabbits with four ears, and animals born with both sexes. In retrospect, we can identify this as animal experiments in order to additionally breed entire limbs and organs on carrier animals, for example a human ear that grows on a pig. Of the fewest such animal experiments, we still learn in 745 public, because they are negatively proven. But covertly from the public it will certainly continue, I'm sure. Already in 1958, White Feather, a Hopi elder, described nine characters (see Frissell).
"This is the first sign: we learn about the arrival of white-skinned men who look like Pahana, but do not live like Pahana. They are men who take land that does not belong to them. And men who strike their enemies with thunderclaps. The second sign: Our countries will see the coming of spinning 750 wheels filled with voices. The third sign: A strange animal like a buffalo, but with big long horns, will overrun the country in large numbers. The fourth sign: The land is crossed by iron snakes. The fifth sign: The country is crossed by a huge spiderweb. The sixth sign: The land is traversed by stone streams that make pictures in the sun. The seventh sign: You will hear that the sea is turning black and many living things are dying because of it. The Eighth Sign: You will see many young 755 people who wear their hair long as my people, come to us and join the tribal nations to learn their ways and their wisdom.

You have probably already realized that all these signs that announce the end of the world, have largely fulfilled and relate to past events. The first sign may well have announced the arrival of Europeans in North America and they had rifles, whose bullets struck enemies with thunder, while 760 the second sign aimed at the wagon, the treks and the colonization of North America by the whites.
The signs three, four and five refer to the arrival of the Longhorn cattle, the construction of the railway and the distribution of telephone lines, power lines or the Internet. The sixth sign coincided with the construction of asphalt roads and the seventh with the environmental catastrophe off the coast of the United States, where oil escaped uncontrollably from a well or production platform.
765 The eighth sign then was fulfilled with the flower power hippie movement.

The descriptions are typical of the dilemma of a medium show: you see things and can describe them, but you do not understand them and do not even know the terms that are shaped for them. So, for the Hopi, we've been heading to the abyss for a very long time. Only one of their predictions has not come true yet: the Bluestar Prophecy. Bluestar, it is said, will appear when the end of the world 770 is imminent. I want to quote this prophecy from the English Wikipedia. Of course, their content as well as any oral tradition (and now every publication on the Internet) is also controversial, even among the Hopi, as one grandfather has probably told it differently than the other. Considering the difficult circumstances in which they passed on their tradition, this is not surprising at all. The decay of the one and only right doctrine is everywhere to observe, it is almost characteristic of the 775 modern age. But we also discover more and more frequently that the one doctrine came about only through powerful intrigues, in which other opinions and truths are hushed up and deviants pursued or killed as heretics. Maybe the one truth does not exist, maybe the truth always has many facets, maybe even as many as there are beings with consciousness. And if there is one true truth, then everyone has to find their own. Wikipedia (in parentheses of mine added): "In Hopi mythology, the 780 Bluestar Kachina or 'Saquasohuh' is a Kachina or a ghost that is coming or going that will announce the beginning of the new world by appearing in the form of a blue star. The Bluestar Kachina is considered the ninth and final sign before the 'Day of Purification', described as a catastrophe or even an 'all-devouring catastrophe' that will lead to the cleansing of the planet Earth. White Feather has described the ninth and third last signs of destruction so:

785 'You will hear of a place of residence in the heavens above the earth, which will fall with a great crash. It will appear as a blue star. Very soon after, the ceremonies of my people will cease.' That sounds like a space station where astronauts live. And at some point, it crashes or is brought down controlled. And it then burns up in a bluish glow. The idea of the Blue Star Kachina marking the end of all Hopi rituals is also found in Water's book, the "Book of the Hopi," where he says, 'The 790 end of the entire Hopi-Ceremonies will come when a Kachina takes off his mask (and the person behind it is visible) in front of uninitiated children during his dance in the public square (Plaza). The absence of Hopi ceremonies will coincide with the destruction of the Fourth World. Waters interpreted its meaning that World War III would begin, and the United States would be torn apart by the war and totally destroyed and irradiated, leaving only the Hopis and their homeland intact.
795 The war from the end of the world is described as 'a spiritual (or spiritual) conflict fought with material things'.

Of course, among all the people who heard about it, there was a lot of speculation about what the world was going to die for. According to Hopi's Prophecy (as reported by Waters), the True White Brother (Pahana) will come to Earth and look for the Hopi shortly after Bluestar Kachina is 800 revealed and the day of cleansing came. He will look for those who 'steadfastly cling to their ancient teachings' (even and especially among the Hopi). It is said that if the True White Brother succeeds in finding those who still follow the true Hopi way of life, he will create the world anew and save all believers (who follow this way of life) from destruction. However, Hopi mythology also describes an alternate version of the prophecy in which the True White Brother fails in his 805 mission and cannot find such men and women. Then it is predicted that the earth will be completely destroyed and none of us will be spared." End of quote, Wikipedia.

This idea is similar to that of the Last Judgment among Christians. And the destruction story of Sodom and Gomorrah from the Bible. There it was God who wanted to find at least one in these cities, who still kept the commanded way of life. In Christianity the return of the Messiah is 810 expected, and then the dead will be resurrected and judged together with the living and sorted into heaven or hell. For me, this punishment and rewarding scenario has become more and more alien with the years. A lemming is not punished for his wrongdoing, he either follows the train of his conspecifics or not. The deer will not be punished for misconduct if it gets caught by the hunter. It just fell victim to a regulation of harmony in the forest, because the hunter replaces the predators in 815 our forests. What happens when a single species propagates unrestrained, you can read from grasshopper plagues or the propagation of introduced species in a functioning biotope. They usually reduce their numbers themselves by evading their livelihood and perishing. The locust plague did that to humans at some point. If we ignore the moral index finger, these traditions only say: If you or your species upset the balance, you must and your whole species must live with the 820 consequences.

Of all the traditions, the story of the Bluestar Kachina is one of the oldest. In a source on the internet, I found: "This kachina will be first seen at the dances and show up to the children in the village plaza during the night. After that, Bluestar will physically appear as a star in the sky. When Nangasohu (Bluestar) appears, it is the wake-up call for a new day and a new way of life and the 825 beginning of the new world to come. And so, the changes will begin: first as a fire that burns, in us. Desires and greed will consume people and lead to conflicts. And the Hopi are called not to be involved, but to stick to the original teachings and return to a peaceful life. In a broader sense, this means that the peaceful people of the human family are called upon not to be drawn into the chaos of the world and instead should only follow their own inner voice. Not soon after Bluestar, the Hopi await the purifier in the sky, also called Red Star Katchina. The red star heralds the day of purification, whereupon the earth and all its living beings and all life will change forever. This Purifier will emit a red light, and all things will change in their being. Every living thing is given the opportunity to change, very big and very small. Those people who still live in a natural way will not be touched by the cleaner. They will survive and build a new world. The Hopi are convinced that only ancient teachings can convey the ability to understand the signs and messages found in every living thing, even in our bodies or in a drop of blood. For all forms of life receive messages from the twins (at this point it is unclear whether this means the red and the blue star / the Kachinas of the same name or the forces at the poles). After the twins' appearance, there will be seven years left to change, it's up to us to decide.

Over the last seven years, many people will have lost their souls. The changes are so intensely experienced that people without a strong spiritual connection really go crazy, because without the connection to our source, we are nothing. Life in the cities is supposed to be so bad that many will choose to leave the world, some in whole groups. They will do this through illnesses, accidents and assassinations, up to armed conflicts. The Hopi emphasize that only those who return to the old values can find and keep peace in their minds. They can and must simply hand over the craziness around them to the earth. They also predict a hard time for mothers with children, because mothers are shunned and many of the children will be unnatural. Some of their souls come from the stars, some from past worlds, and some children are even artificially created by humans, the latter then carry no soul at all. Many people will be spiritually empty, you will not see any life force in their eyes. They will wander like ghosts through the cities, very heavy in their steps. They will walk as if every step they take is painful because they have parted with their spiritual connection to the Source. If Bluestar physically appears as a star in the sky, then the two twins follow her, keeping the Earth's poles in balance. It triggers events associated with a pole shift: earthquakes, tsunamis, weather disasters, volcanic eruptions. After the pole shift, the twins will return to their task and return the earth to its former, natural direction of rotation - counterclockwise.

The Hopi tradition also speaks of the fact that the rotation of the earth in the past had been manipulated by not so well-meaning star beings to our detriment. They expect to see the twins (Bluestar and Redstar Kachina) in the northwestern sky. Then their other well-meaning Kachinas will also come in their UFOs to see who still sticks to their original teachings. They will bring with them many from their star family. After the arrival of the twins, people without soul will disappear before our eyes like smoke. Others will carry great deformities in the mind and in the body. The Hopi expect that beings will walk around in human bodies that are not out of this reality. For many of the gates that have shielded us so far will have been opened by those who do not have the best in mind for humanity. There will be a lot of confusion. All human bonds will be affected. People will be unsettled by their gender, their identity and just about everything. The bonds in the society, between the sexes, the families and between the children and their parents are attacked. Everything that roots people socially will be perverted. Life itself will be perverted and there will be little social order left.

The Hopi say many people will even ask the mountains to fall on them to end their misery. Others will act as if what is happening cannot touch them. These are the ones who remember the original teachings and keep the heart and spirit connected again. It is those who remember who their mother is and who their father is. These are also the Whites who have left their company to live in the mountains and forests. The Red Star Kachina, whom they call the Purifier, expects the Hopi to be a small star, which will be very close to Earth. They believe that he will observe us from heaven to see how well we remember the sacred teachings. There will be many amazing signs in our sky anyway. We will know that there is a Creator, that it is not a dream, not a fantasy. Even people without connection to the source will see the Creator's face above the sky. At least they can feel invisible things very strong. Our reality will move into and out of the Dreamtime. This causes things that do not make sense. Many gates to lower worlds are opened and things we have already 880 forgotten will come back to remind us of our past creations. All living beings will want to be there when time ends, and we enter the everlasting cycle of the fifth world. We will receive many warnings from below and above that allow us to change. Then, one morning, we will wake up at a red dawn. The sky will appear to us like red blood. Things will happen that even psychics could not describe, because this reality will be very different. Strange animals will appear suddenly, some 885 from the past, others have never been seen here. Human nature itself will seem unusual, for we will wander among the worlds and have many spirits even in our own bodies. After a while we will walk again with our star sisters but not without the purifier leaving his mark in the universe. No living thing will remain untouched. Through this time, you can only feel your way through the heart and in union with your spiritual self. It is important to simply live on Earth and in harmony with all of 890 its living beings. The Hopi want us to remember that we are the keepers of the earth, the source's fire-bearers. Our relatives from the stars will come home to see how well we have coped with our journey." End quote.

In the Bluestar Prophecy, the Kachina dancer takes off his mask in front of uninitiated children and strangers, he dances in the plaza, not in the protected Kiva, the holy meeting room of the Hopi. I 895 even go one step further: There are women and children who have made a mask for this big day and now dance with the Kachina dancer in the plaza – worldwide - and then take off their mask. The ritual of the Hopi comes to an end, and this dance is also the innocent transition into a new world in which the women and children take on a new role and the men are no longer needed, at least for the old ceremonies. The aimed result of the Hopi ceremonies was to keep the fourth world stable and in 900 harmony. And to do everything so that people can be saved into the fifth. They did their best and we should thank them! Their ceremonies are no longer needed at the end of the fourth world, because in the fifth dimension everything is a little different. In heaven on earth, new traditions will form.
So how do you have to understand the Bluestar Prophecy? Kachinas are strong and benevolent spirits for the Hopi. When they call them in their rituals, they know exactly who they are calling, 905 why they call them and what they ask of them. The dancer is then captured by this spirit and is acting him before the people. The dancer can experience, express and possibly also give him a voice and experience things that are inaccessible to him while he is not in trance. In order to accustom the Hopi children at an early age to this kind of channeling, as one would generally call this in the western spiritual world today, they receive small wooden dolls from Kachina. So, you always have 910 to distinguish whether these dolls are meant or the real invocation or the spirit behind it.
Today, the veils to the other worlds and dimensions are becoming more and more permeable to more and more people, so channeling is always easier, everyone can already learn it relatively effortlessly. One does not have to call the well-meaning ghosts so elaborately in ceremonies.
Kachina dancer of the sacred ceremonies dance only in the underground Kivas before other 915 insiders. So that is already the break with the tradition: that the Bluestar Kachina dances in public and even decreases his mask in the end. Here are specifically mentioned uninitiated women and children - and a public plaza. There, the Bluestar Kachina dances and takes off his (her?) mask at the end. Perhaps women with masks also smuggle into the gatherings of the Hopi men and dance unrecognized with and among them? That would not be a Hopi ritual anymore and the sacred 920 ceremonies held by men would be over. Of course, I do not know what the removal of the mask means to a Hopi, but I myself saw many women with children in my own inner sight with masks dancing on many places around the world, they dance in public on the squares and at the end of their dance take off their masks and reveal themselves amidst the cities in a joyful and peaceful event. And continue to celebrate happily, of course, with the men together in the end of the new 925 ceremony. I saw all people dancing and celebrating happily. It was more like a global intercultural dance event that will women and children make work together for all. While the survivors of the final disaster are still dealing with the aftermath, they will begin to build the new world, looking for new directions for men, women and children. If that happens, the prophecy is right: there will be no ceremonies for a long time to come. And no religions and know-alls. Only a community of 930 survivors, a human family. A reset of values and interaction with each other and the conscious development of life-friendly sustainable community structures. The Earth itself will get back some of its sacred higher structures (many of which it already has) and humans as well. More in the next chapter. Very few people already receive very high structures, but enough to create much better and more consciously and with much more power over probabilities, because according to the Hopi tradition, there are two other worlds left to our development.

935 We have long exceeded the turning point, it is now going its way. We discover our higher self, live from the heart intuition and return to our highest potential. Instead of falling unconsciously, we consciously rise again in creation.

940 The vibration of the next world will be higher overall. The esoteric-spiritual family worldwide calls this process 'ascension to the fifth dimension'. Only the leading role of men must come to an end, but not the culture of the Hopi or other peoples. Together, women and men will create new role models that honor each other and shape their lives together. True power and leadership from within will cause people to reveal all their talents. Everyone is going to change the world by just being himself and being herself - beyond all role models, books and opinions.

945 What could be meant by the Purification of the Red Star? The following interpretations of the Bluestar Prophecy I have found in other books, on the internet and on YouTube:

1. Interpretation: The space station ISS - The house in the sky will fall like a blue star. Could this be an allusion to the first 'living space' of humanity high above the earth in space? I heard that the Space Station ISS should be scrapped by 2020 (my inner knowledge: 2022).
950 She will then probably plunge into the sea under control. Could this phenomenon be interpreted as a blue star? Will the materials that make up the ISS Space Station cause a blue miracle of light when burned out? The Hopi elder, who came out with this idea in public, claimed at least that you must understand the Bluestar Prophecy that way: That a blue star falls from the sky. Or does the blue star stay in the sky and pull away? If this actual happens 955 in 2022, there would also be an appropriate period of seven years to the expected pole shift, as predicted by Nostradamus over Dolores Cannon. In her third book on and with Nostradamus, her clients in deep trance (Quantum Healing Hypnosis) visit the medium of Nostradamus and, together with him, substantiate the vision of the perceived pole shift in 2029. The book also contains maps on the redistribution of land and water thereafter.
960 Unfortunately, it is not available in German. So, Dolores does not speculate on the seer's coded verses, but finds out in conversation with him what he has actually seen and what he can say without fear of the Inquisition. I think this source is very credible.

If we consciously wake people up to their highest potential, everything can change, just everything. Creator wants us to thrive. That we experience his creation and develop spiritually.
965 That is what the Hopi tradition claims.

2. Interpretation: Comets or asteroids. A blue comet appears in the sky, it pulls its course as a warning sign and it is followed by a red comet, which brings the cleansing. But there is no talk of a comet's tail in the prophecy, and since most media perceptions are received visually and with voices, such a tail would surely have found mention. I think that interpretation is 970 less likely. In addition, comets travel across the sky time and again, with the Bluestar Kachina and the Red Star Kachina being received by the Hopi tribe long ago, they are far more extraordinary than comets. But it could actually be an asteroid: There is still the huge asteroid Apophis, which is expected in 2029 in flyby. But can we see that and if yes, in blue, red or in which other color?

975 3. Interpretation: Planet X. Bluestar is Planet X and Red Star is the second Sun, the brown and close-up red-hot dwarf called Nemesis. On YouTube, Nibiru is often referred to as the planet X or the final symbol, a hypothesis that was originally brought into play in the middle of the last century by renowned physicists and astronomers, but that was not echoed much from the scientific side. I am aware that most people who read this will for once dismiss this 980 interpretation and will habitually dismiss this idea as a conspiracy theory. Reason enough for you to abandon this book and turn to seemingly more important things? I ask you, in spite of this impulse, to stay here and at least to give this interpretation a chance. Maybe we are not told everything? What do you think: would an inevitable threat to us publicly be 985 communicated to all of us or would it rather be kept secret for as long as possible? Does it not sound pretty mysterious that a certain section on the NASA images is always blackened?

What should we not see? And what motivated the Vatican, to install its own telescope in Earth orbit to especially cover the infrared range, which could absorb the thermal radiation of an already extinct star. A star like Nemesis, Red Star, the Purifier, which is no longer 990 visible in the normal light range at a great distance, but when approaching it would have to appear as a huge red star in the sky. And would not the approach of such a mass have a devastating effect on the earth? And what actual got the Vatican to call this telescope 'Lucifer'? In Catholic theology Lucifer is equated with evil, that sounds very much like the purifier of the Hopi or the last judgment of christianity!

The Planet X hypothesis mentioned in the first chapter goes like this: Like most suns out there, our 995 sun is part of a multiple star system revolving around a common center somewhere between the two suns. Our scientists know at least since a while that this constellation is common in the universe.
Even if both solar systems are very far apart and the orbits of their planets do not touch, they affect each other considerably and mutually by the force of gravitation, because of course, the partner star could also have its own planetary system. Could our sun have a partner? Why have we never seen 1000 this sun? That we do not perceive a second sun does not mean that it is not there. It can also be a brown dwarf. Thus, extinguished suns are called at the end of their lifetime when their fuel has run out and they stop glowing in the visible range. As they continue to cool, they remain as a massive celestial body and glow. If the sun actually has a brown dwarf as its partner, this star might still 1005 have to be discovered in the infrared range, because it is certainly still warmer than the cold space around it. Or as a second hypothesis, this second sun has never ignited and glows dark red like coals. If such a celestial body comes close enough to the earth, you could probably see it glow as a red star in the sky, it would fit to the description of the Red Star Kachina and be seen as a large, brown-red hot star in the sky. While there are many interpretations for BlueStar, this would be the 1010 only plausible interpretation I know of the Red Star Kachina, the destroyer that appears after the blue star in the sky and initiates the day of purification. And that there could happen a lot of unusual catastrophic things is very plausible, if it comes so close to us, that we see his glow shining. The planet X or Nibiru would then be seen shortly before his sun, possibly as a blue star. We as layman cannot distinguish planets in the sky from stars. So, if our sun with its twin and partner, a brown dwarf, orbits a common center, then the two constellations could also come over again cyclically 1015 and especially their respective planets themselves interfere with each other, which of course would increasingly lead to volcanic eruptions and extreme weather conditions. Imagine two children, each whirling their skipping rope around in a circle at the end of which they tied a plastic cube ring. They themselves are so far apart that only the trajectories of the rings overlap slightly. Then they also whirl upwards and downwards. They could do this for a long time without the objects colliding at 1020 the end of their rope. So, it can go well for millennia and millions of years, and then one day the respective planets are traveling in their respective orbit nearby. They do not have to collide to unfold a strong effect on the Earth, that is even more unlikely, the intervening space is simply huge.
You just must remember the effect of the gravitational field of our moon to be able to imagine what would come to us with such an approach. Nobody will deny how much our little moon influences 1025 us, the tides of the oceans and our emotional moods and our weather conditions! Now imagine an approaching sun with its own planets! In the circles that support this hypothesis on the Internet, the increase in extreme weather conditions such as storms and floods as well as volcanic eruptions are already attributed to the effect of these approaching gravitational forces. This is also the only theory I know that fits seamlessly with the whole Tiamat story. In that case, the water planet Tiamat would 1030 have burst into pieces and been thrown off track due to a particularly unfavorable encounter between the two planetary systems. But now you do not have to be afraid and anxious, wait and read this book to an end, you are quite safe! According to relevant internet sources, one can imagine the twin system of our sun in such a way: the sun twin, the brown dwarf, is as I said called 'Nemesis'. It is orbited by three planets: In the very center of Helion, which in turn is accompanied 1035 by a moon called 'Harrington', in the second lane of Arboda, and in the outer and most dangerous orbit of 'Nibiru', a double-tailed planet which makes him look like a disc with wings on approach. Nibiru also has a moon called Ferrada. I could not figure out where this description came from, whether from the clay tablets of old Sumer or elsewhere. In any case, not from NASA. The common focus of the two suns is not at the height of the rotation disk, on which our sun planets make their tracks, but at an acute angle to it. The disks on which the planets of the Nemesis sun draw their orbits are at an acute angle to ours and are also in opposite directions. So, the planets are clearly on a collision course, like a clockwork that knows big and small cycles. From time to time the Earth's system comes so dangerously close that it triggers climatic disasters, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions on earth, but above all a staggering of the Earth's axis and a pole shift.

1045 Sometimes even the outer planets are endangered.

The big time cycle could be about 80,000 years, at least if you believe the Hopi and its history. Every 80,000 years their world was destroyed, some elders claimed. The destruction of the world has allegedly happened three times since the beginning of its tradition, so the Hopi look back on a considerable oral tradition of about 240,000 years!

1050 4. Interpretation: earth ascending into the fifth dimension. What we call our blue planet is obviously a giant object in the cosmos that must appear as a blue star to an extraterrestrial traveler. When the first astronauts admired the sublime beauty of our earth as a blue planet and brought pictures of it to earth, our earth has shown itself under all the masks of our civilization: a very fragile, harmonious world in danger. No one can escape the fantastic impression of the photos from space, revealing the grandiose beauty of our water planet. The Earth seen from space is a beautiful gem. With the view from space to the earth we are also merged in the consciousness over all borders and differences to one humanity. Could this conscious awakening to a human family be meant? For the first time people could see the Earth as what it is - a fragile, precious, blue planet. Even these photos alone have changed the consciousness of humanity tremendously. On Facebook a statement circulated by the German astronaut Alexander Gerst, which I recommend you herewith.

1060 The cleansing (or at least its announcement) began then centuries ago, and if you take the Hopi literally, actually since the arrival of the white man in America. So, you have to think for each sign in larger time periods, only the day of the cleansing itself is interpreted by the Hopi as a single day of 24 hours. It may be that all the wickedness of the world has not yet reached its peak and there still has to be a day of great cleansing that transcends everything that has happened so far. Inhumanity has spread worldwide to the last aborigine, disguised as progress. At present, the US Empire is conducting seven wars simultaneously on the planet, each David against Goliath and veiled by rebels, terrorists and freedom fighters, who are supplied with weapons and know-how by the main players. In fact, it is a step back instead of a step forward: ever further away from a harmonious, peaceful togetherness and further away from a sustainable life in harmony with Mother Earth. Farther away from a natural, vibrant environment. So maybe no blue star will appear. And no red, we can certainly mitigate the events or at least create a safe passage for ourselves and our loved ones. And if a cosmic event should happen, then we have to deal with it and make the best of it.

1065
1070 That the worst prophecies do not come true, and the transition instead is gentle, is ultimately the stated purpose of this book and the intuitive concerted effort of millions of rainbow warriors worldwide. On the other hand, the fifth sign (spider web) shows that there are often several true interpretations. So, all the interpretations may be valid at the same time and with each other. At all levels, the same sign may repeat itself. As above, so below.

1080 All serious predictors of history have asserted, in addition to all their predictions, that they can only see probable events that will happen when people continue to do exactly as they did before.

Whether Nostradamus or Irrlmayer or currently Martin Zoller, they want to inform, so that people are prepared and mitigate the events or completely avert. It does not have to be that way. It has not to go that way either and it looks like it will not continue like this. The fewest predictions of the future for this transition have arrived, time passed without the third world war breaking out and without the Antichrist appearing, unless one wants to uplift Osama bin Laden into that role. Well, the danger with the beast, the 666 code (www), the implanted chip, the cyborg and a world dictatorship of the few, is still hovering over humanity, but all that should have come over us much earlier and much more powerfully. Somehow it seems that the time and the secret agenda of the deep state, as Daniele Ganser, a Suisse Historian you should notice and listen to, calls it, is stretched and watered down, because we have much more influence on that than most people realize. And this is exactly what I want to reinforce with this book: The influence of us peace lovers on the course of history and our own direct future. Hopi means 'the peace lovers'. And in the relatively new language of North America, English, Hopi sounds like hope, hope. We hope that it will be fine and as many as possible wake up and come along. With long-term prophecies, to name a date is meaningless, only predictions with star constellation are reliable over time, because the prophet has to assume that the usual timeframe could change in the meantime. It then takes an astronomer or astrologer to reassign an astrologically determinable event in the respective calendar of a cultural epoch. The Mayan calendar, for example, repeats itself cyclically, and large and small cycles mesh like gears, whereas our Western, Christian-influenced culture dates linearly and is based on the birth of Christ. Again, other cultures are always guided by the annual, cyclic precision of the movement of all objects in the sky and align their structures in the cardinal directions so that they can determine the equinoxes. So, it is very likely that the arrival of the blue and following red star were shown to the Hopi prophets as a sky constellation, a not yet known in advance appearance such. For example, a supernova that may be on the road for light years and suddenly arrives, or an approach of the solar companion Nemesis with its planet Nibiru. First Nibiru appears in blue and then the brown Sun Dwarf follows even in red / infrared. The world as we know it now will be destroyed by vibration and radiation, was foretold. Or the lack of vibration. It could have been a third shake, a third world war with nuclear bombs, which was expected to begin with the outbreak of the Iraq war in the 1990s. The Hopi predicted that especially the US itself would be completely destroyed by nuclear bombs. At sunrise, the cities are still there and at sunset, the ground would only be steaming. The Hopi said that if we give up the racist and religious disharmony, we do not have to go through the third shake, the third world war. Then the mind would open to the radiance of one's soul and circle. Then a lot of good would happen on earth. As I say, Heaven on Earth is not far away. The Sword of Damocles of a third world war hovered over humanity until the summer of 2017, when the newly elected US President Donald Trump and Kim of North Korea exchanged threatening gestures. Since then it has been decided that it will continue without atomic bombing and World War III, and the earth will not divide into two major realities either. This outcome owes its existence to the myriad of rainbow warriors who, since 1987, have awakened in waves and incarnated in many cultures, dramatically changing the course of history. They have cleaned and lifted the vibration of the earth. Since the mid-nineties of the last century, it was clear that they had managed to create a second, new timeline in which the earth is not destroyed. Ignored by the mainstream, many spiritual people worldwide only followed their inner voice. They became researchers and founders and, above all, parents of children who, as even purer souls, the next shot of our collective destiny. After the Indigo pioneers, crystal children could be born who no longer fought, but just plainly followed their big heart (their very thick connection to Source). Now it is clear: The old future reality has completely disappeared, as if it had not existed even as a potential. No downfall catastrophe in the old timeline was completely reversed. There will now be only the ascended earth and people who check out or ascend. The earth itself will ascend into the fifth dimension, and humanity will and must make the ascent with it. Once again, there will be no second earth that sinks further in the vibration, and another dimension descends tumbling into eternal, senseless paralysis, or that, when falling, is already fragmented and ends in self-destruction. That was what all prophets saw exclusively before the opening of the second timeline in 1994. All prophecies whose promulgation dates before 1994 have been repealed. You can just forget it. Among them is even Nostradamus and what he interpreted with Dolores Cannon. Unless he has announced a cosmic event such. Whether the current, local wars aggravate, or the conflicts calm down, depends now above all on the consciousness of the people involved. In some peoples and cultures there are apparently still collective patterns running which call after a collective vigorous discharge.

1140 And the profiteers of the old matrix will certainly not voluntarily surrender the scepter. They do their job well: they put under pressure those who were not yet ready to open themselves to the free flow of Source in them and live peacefully from the heart of their highest potential. Now they are forced to live out of the unconscious: their own, their collective culture and, above all, their surrounding matrix. Because some individuals and cultures are surrounded by a much denser and 1145 heavier matrix – a matrix particularly tough and conflicting. People who are still very deep in the matrix, driven in the collective acting out of all contents of their unconscious are like a leaf in the wind of the powerful matrix forces behind. Maybe their sleep is so deep that one has to shake them violently in bed to wake them from their nightmare, the matrix.
Bad experiences can well be in the best interest of their own soul: that they find their individual 1150 turning point and progress again in a natural way and without being controlled by the Matrix. That they seek the Creator and live in harmony with the whole living creation. Each prediction is only more or less likely, not certain. In the chapter 'We can do it - we create it' we go into more detail, here only so much: The more people wake up and live innocent, enlightened and freely their live in their highest potential as co-creators and consciously create heaven on earth, the more indefinite the 1155 old predictions become. And the transition will be more gentle and easier. For how could one still foresee what is being created by us all together? We do not know it yet!
I have already indicated that I received my own information about Bluestar and only then came across this prophecy on the Internet. I've thought, if the Hopi Kachina dancers invite a kachina into their body, it can be the mind of an ancestor, a mountain, a star, or a well-intentioned spirit / alien.
1160 In our tradition, we might then call these kachinas 'angels' or 'ascended masters'. If a saint went into meditation or prayer, he would also have associated himself with such a very high being, such as: Jesus, Mother Mary or another saint. These high spirits have always inspired people around the world. While one can learn a great deal about the various angels, archangels and Ascended Masters and Masters, because countless spiritual media convey their messages, there are also those who 1165 hardly step into the public limelight, and one of them is called Bluestar. I could not figure out if it is known to the Hopi that there is an Ascended Master named 'Bluestar', she is also called 'Stardust' in the second name. Each Ascended Master embodies certain aspects or qualities that he then promotes in others. And Bluestar stands for the qualities of basic trust, creativity and childish playfulness. She promotes creativity and inner and outer growth. Even among Spirituals, this Ascended Master is 1170 hardly known, but her two names, Bluestar and Stardust, are often used as names for companies, clubs and creative productions. Could it be that Hopi's last Kachina dancer will connect with this Ascended Master, channel her energy, and dance her? Why should she, of all people, announce the imminent change in the Hopi ceremonies? This was unfortunately not readable from the material on the Internet and in books, and apparently it did not matter, because I should 1175 probably discover a whole new meaning that also had a lot to do with myself.
Well, and with that, it's time for my coming out: When I meditated once in the summer of 2013, I just wanted to nurture and reinforce my connection to my Supreme Self and ask who I was and what I had to do with the end of the world. Then a second, sublime voice in me said, "I AM Bluestar Stardust, the Ascending Earth. I am the soul of Tara. Tara is the soul of Gaia. And Gaia is the soul of 1180 the earth. So, I am the Supreme Self of this planet. I am the ascension of the earth and I want a safe passage for all my people. I came to announce the worlds ending and new beginning. And the countdown is starting now." Whow! Not enough that the information and the energy behind touched and surprised me, she also said that in English and wanted me to dedicate her a blog and a Twitter account in that foreign language! So, should I actually be the Bluestar taking off her mask in public 1185 (coming out)? Now you probably do not know my self-esteem, it fluctuates in phases between absolute Looser and latent megalomania. I was not thrilled, rather careful, so that my ego did not gallop off with me. At the same time, I perceived the message as a truth, as a hope, and as a fear, and did not bother to overreach. OK. Now you know why I just had to write this book. I am Bluestar. That's how Noah felt when he received the order for his ark. But invariably, everyone in 1190 my ark is invited to stand up for life on earth, for peace and the prosperity of all mankind. And it's an Ark of Consciousness, as you'll see, and there is room in it for all.

I can understand you if you now throw the book in the corner because it just sounds too crazy! It would be a pity, though, because you would miss the chance to learn more about yourself and how we can create a safe passage together. It's already created, you just must remember it. At a higher level we have already done it. We went through countless variants and trained them excessively. We are well prepared. If the ideas for our rise on the Internet are so different, it's because everyone remembers a lot of specific workouts and not others. What really happens here is recreated daily, without any major and longer-term prediction. We live timelessly in the now of the newly defined timeline. All you have to do is wake up to who you really are. To who you really are. We had an appointment, do you not remember? Happy passage through the end of the world!
